San Diego Children’s Discovery Museum to Host “Family Space Night” Event

Escondido, CA.-- San Diego Children’s Discovery Museum is thrilled to host its fifth annual Family Space Night on Saturday, November 13 from 5:00-7:30 p.m.

This after-hours event, presented by ASML, provides the whole family with the opportunity to participate in hands-on Science, Technology, Reading, Engineering, Art, and Math (STREAM) activities. Through the theme of space exploration, children ages 0-10 are offered early exposure to STREAM education.

Due to the ongoing pandemic and budget cuts, many schools lack the resources necessary to integrate STREAM education into their curriculum. The Museum’s STREAM programs and events are an introduction to science and engineering for many families, especially low-income, who may not have access to these hands-on programs.

"At the Museum, we pride ourselves in creating authentic hands-on learning experiences which spark a love of learning. Through events such as Space Night, we're providing families with opportunities to build foundational fluencies in STEM education while feeding a natural wonder about all things from gravity to galaxies! This event is a terrific opportunity for children to engage in space science in a way that fuels their curiosity and imagination. We are so grateful to all the community partners who will be sharing their related expertise on the day," said Krishna Kabra, CEO of San Diego Children’s Discovery Museum.

Through interactive activities children will learn about gravity and the moon, space exploration, Mars Rover exploration with NASA Solar System Ambassadors, coding and robotics, astronaut jetpacks, spacecraft design, and more! With a variety of workshops, both children and parents will leave with new knowledge and passion for science and engineering.
